RELATIVE PRONOUNS (WHO, WHICH, THAT, WHOSE)

Relative Pronouns

A relative pronoun is a pronoun that heads a relative clause. A relative clause is used to give additional information about a noun. It comes after the noun to identify it or give more information about it. Relative pronouns are "which," "who," and "whose."

Here are some simple examples:

Who: We use who to refer to people.

- The man who bought our car had an accident.

The clause "who bought our" clarifies which man you are referring to.

Which: We use which to refer to a thing or an idea.

- That is the radio which I won in the competition.

That: We use that for both a person and a thing/idea.

- I want to speak to the man who / that called me this morning.
- They rescued the woman who / that got lost in the forest.
- The car which / that belongs to the company is the red one over there.
- That is the watch which / that my grandfather gave me.

Whose: We use whose to refer to ownership.

- The student whose grades were the highest in our class got a scholarship.

We can combine two sentences using relative clauses. We can add some more information into a sentence without the need to start a new one. The relative clause comes right after the noun it describes. The first word in the relative clause is the relative pronoun.

- I tried to talk to the woman. She was crying.
- I tried to talk to the woman who was crying.
- The food was excellent. They served it at the restaurant.
- The food which they served at the restaurant was excellent.
- The man got off the bus. His mobile was ringing
- The man whose mobile was ringing got off the bus.
