STATIVE VERBS

There are some verbs in English that we don't use in the continuous form. We call these verbs stative verbs. These verbs usually describe states that last for some time.

Here is a list of some common stative verbs:

be like love hate want need prefer agree have wish know realize understand believe remember belong look think taste see

Some verbs can be used in continuous meaning with a change in the meaning:

BE

“BE” is a stative verb, but when we use it in the continuous form, it means “behaving” or “acting”

- You are naughty. (it is a part of your personality)
- You are being naughty. (You aren't normally naughty, you are naughty now)

THINK

When we use “think” in the continuous form we mean “consider” or “have it in my head”

- I think she is very beautiful. (this is my opinion)
- I'm thinking about the exam tomorrow. (My mind is busy with the exam tomorrow)

HAVE

When we use “HAVE” in the simple form, we mean “to own”. But, we use “HAVE” with a lot of different words to form collocations.

- I have 2 sisters and one brother.
- I am having
 - a party.
 - a great/good time.
 - a picnic with my classmates.
 - a bath.
 - breakfast/dinner/lunch right now.

SEE

We use “SEE” in its simple form to mean...

- I see your point. (I understand it)
- I see her every day; we live very close. (see with your own eyes.)

We use “SEE” in its continuous form to mean...

- I’m seeing my dentist tomorrow. (meet/have an appointment with)
- I’m seeing a girl. She is English. (have a relationship with)

TASTE

We use “TASTE” in its simple form to mean...

- This chocolate tastes great. (has a certain taste)

We use “TASTE” in its continuous form to mean...

- We are tasting different kinds of cheese at the moment. (the action of tasting)

LOOK

We use “LOOK” in its simple form to mean...

- You look very young. (Describing the appearance of someone)

We use “LOOK” in its continuous form to mean...

- I’m looking for my glasses. (I don’t have my glasses with me, I’m searching for them)
- I’m looking at you now. (My eyes are directly on you)
- I’m looking after my sister’s kids at the moment. (I’m taking care of my sister’s kids)
